Little Hope of Success in a Naval Retirement Scheme.

The plan by which Commodores Joseph Fyffe and Henry Erben were to reach the grade of rear admiral before their retirement for age has apparently fallen through. Commodore Fyffe will retire in July and Commodore Erben in September next. There is no prospect whatever at present of a vacancy in the list of rear admirals that would insure their promotion in the regular way before the date set for their retirement. Rear Admiral Bancroft Gherardi, the rank-ing officer of the navy, will retire in Decem-ber next. That will be too late, however, to benefit either of the officers named. Com-modore O. F. Stanton ranks next after Commodore Fyffe, and the retirement of the latter in July will put him at the head of

This plan fell through, because Admiral Greer, who will be the senior officer of the navy on Admiral Gherardi's retirement, re-fused to be a party to it. The other plan contemplated a sacrifice on the part of Admiral Gherardi and Commodore Stanton. Its present status is not clear. According to it Admiral Gherardi was to retire at orce. This would insure the promotion of Commodore Fyffe to the grade of admiral He would be retired by law in July and Commodore Stanton would become an admiral. He was also to be retired immediately on his own application, and then Commodore Erben would be promoted to the desired grade in advance of his retirement in September. It is a very in-genious plan to help the two officers on genious plan to help the two officers on the verge of retirement, and might easily be carried into effect, if all the parties to it were willing. But, as already stated, there is a cog loose somewhere. Admiral Gherardi is unwilling to hasten his own re-tirement, unless he is absolutely certain that it will accomplish the promotion of

The sessions of the congress of American physicians and surgeons were continued today and the various meetings of the smaller organizations that compose the congress were all well attended. There have registered at headquarters upward of four hundred members from all over the country, and the present congress is generally regarded as the most successful in the history

All of the fourteen societies met in their respective halls this morning and spent several hours in the reading of important and valuable papers on subjects of special interest to their members. This afternoon the general meeting of the congress at Metzerott Hall was under the direction of two of the leading societies, the American Association of Genito-Urinary Surgeons and the American Gynecological Society. This Afternoon's Program.

The program for the afternoon is as follows:

From 2 to 3:30 p. m.-General session under the direction of the American Association of Genito-Urinary Surgeons. Subject, "Nephritis in its Surgical Aspects," opened with a paper by Dr. Edward L. The banquet room of the Arlington was a dream of beauty last evening for the banquet given in honor of the congress. More than four hundred people sat down at the magnificently decorated tables and the event as a whole was one of the most elaborate ever seen in this city. It took twenty-five tables to accommodate the guests and the display of palms and flowers was something to be remembered. The only formal toast of the evening was "The old, old army." This was responded to by Gen. Wheeler of Alabama, who made an address that was at the same from Baltimore yesterday and was put in the deck of the Haskin Wood Vulcanizin. GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS

How the Capital's Beauty Might Be Developed by a Harmonious Plan.

The Policy of Placing Public Buildings on Reservations Deprecated-Future of Pennsylvania Avenue.

Written for The Evening Star. The present agitation concerning the location of the government printing house brings very plainly to view the need of a new policy to be adopted by the government in the matter of the location of public buildings and the promotion of the beauty of the national capital. That Washington is the handsome city that it is is all owing to the far-seeing sagacity of two men, Washington and his civil engineer, L'Enfant. Had it not been for the plan adopted by them and adhered to afterward by successive Congresses the fate of the city would have been left to the haphazard tastes and purposes of dealers in corner lots. Everything would have been sold "for a price," and every holder of land would have divided and shaped and used it so as to best promote his private ends. What those two men did a century ago let not the unwisdom of any, least of all, of our national legislators, now undo. Rather let the government adopt the same policy with regard to locating and designing the gov-ernment buildings which Washington laid down with regard to the streets and squares, that is, let this all be comprised in a consistent and far-seeing pian, which shall so place the public buildings that they shall be constantly forming a symmetrical and imposing whole, as beautiful and as impres-sive as that of the recent ideal and yet real structure of pure art at Chicago.

The beauty and grandeur of the white city of the world's fair was not a thing of At the conclusion of this part of the program there was a session under the present streets and squares are. It was an artistic conception, And if Washington grows to be the city of grandeur, dignity and superior architectural beauty that it ought to be, it will not be by accident nor by piece legislation, but by the wise adop-The Conservative Policy of the Dupuy

The manifest destiny of Pennsylvania thoravenue is that of a grand national thor-oughtare, lined on either side with a continuous row of government palaces devoted to the various departments and bureaus, Dr. James C. White, professor of dermatology in Harvard Medical School, folthe park reservations or to hide its buildings away in obscure because cheap places the sooner the nation's capital will begin to assume architecturally that distinguished place among the world's great capitals, which, for the want of such concerted plan, it has so failed thus far to attain. For, while the department buildings are for the most part noble structures, they are lost amid commonplace surroundings, and we have not a single continuous street nor square which shows a handsome or digni-fied architectural ensemble. It is in the power of Congress always to help this, and especially now would be the fit time to begin, and the place, the Capitoi end of the avenue, say, between 1st and 3d streets, on the north side, or between 3d and 4 1-2 streets, on the south side. Place here the new government printing building, and instead of building a deep quadrangle build a continuous street block or couple of blocks, if necessary, with a handsome fa-cade, including a broad colonnade or shaded walk to be continued along the avenue, ultimately like that of the Rue Rivoli in

The idea has been broached that the government printing house must necessarily be so ugly a building as to deserve only to be put out of sight somewhere. There could be nothing more absurd than such a notion. A civilized government, with archi-tectural taste and skill at its command, is not to be pardoned if it erects an ugly building anywhere, and there is certainly no reason why the building to be devoted to the noble art of printing, the glory of our age, and a building likely to be the largest printing establishment in the world, should not be a structure of commanding beauty not be a structure of commanding beauty and dignity. If one would see an example of a printing house, whose business was not thought by its builders to be foreign to all that is beautiful, let him look at the New York Herald building in New York, at the intersection of Broadway and Sixth avenue, a veritable Venetian palace set down in the midst of the crowded and busy down in the midst of the crowded and busy city, with its delicate tracery and marble mosaics as fine as if for a palace for royalty. There is not the slightest doubt but that the government will appropriate money enough to build a building, such as, in the proper hands, may be made a delight to look upon, as well as to serve all its most practical uses. No government building even "for a print-

Taking Leave of the Khedive. From the Egyptian Gazette of Alexandria, Egypt. The Hon. V. C. Barringer, late American counselor in the court of appeals of the mixed tribunals, had the honor of a private audience yesterday morning at Ras-el-Teen palace of his highness the khedive to take leave on his approaching departure from Egypt. His highness the khedive had been graciously pleased to appoint the learned counselor a commander of the Imperial Orcounselor a commander of the Imperial Or-der of the Osmanieh last month. In a letter accompanying the brevet and in-signia of this unsolicited honor, his excel-lency Mazloum Pasha, then minister of justice, informed the distinguished recip-ient that the decoration had been gracious-ly conferred by his highness the khedive in consideration of his long and faithful services. services.

Commendatore Giaccone, vice president of the court of appeal of the mixed tribunals, was authorized at a general meeting of that court to express to the Hon. V. C. Barringer the regrets of his late colleagues at his departure, regrets which, we may say, are shared in by Alexandria and Ramleh society, not only as regards the learned gen-tleman himself, who has held his high judicial post ever since the establishment of the mixed tribunals, but also in respect of his gifted and popular wife, who always did good by stealth and was ever ready to afford relief to the afflicted or distressed.

A Royal Wedding in Vienna Prince Augustus of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha was marrie1 yesterday in the Church of the Hofburg, Vienna, to his cousin, the Archduchess Caroline Immaculata, of the Tuscan branch of the Hapsburgs-Lorraine, The ceremony was performed by the arch-bishop of Vienna and was attended by Emperor Franz Joseph and the Austrian court. Prince Augustus is a grandson of the late ex-Emperor of Brazil. The prince was born at Rio de Janeiro on December 6, 1867, and is an officer in the Austrian navy. The Archduchess Caroline was born on September 5, 1869.
